The funeral of Glen, the twelve-year-old son of Frank Jeffords, who died after an operation for appendicitis at Heaton hospital last week, was held at the home yesterday afternoon. Rev. An appropriate and impressive scene at the cemetery was the attendance of the schoolmates of the deceased in a body, each dropping a flower in the grave. The afflicted family has the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in its sudden and sad bereavement. We learn from Dr. W. H. AN EASTER GIFT.

Something Dainty and Attractive in Pincushiondom.

One of the prettiest pincushions that has been seen in many a day is made of two pieces of plique or linen, buttonholed on the edge and faced over the cushion with ribbons. Nothing could be simpler to make or more attractive when finished for a dainty gift to give a friend at Easter.

To make the embroidered cushion transfer the rose design given on this page to a piece of linen by means of carbon paper. Buttonhole the edge, do the roses with a plain satin stitch, the leaves long and short stitch, the stems Kensington outline stitch and the center of the flowers French knots.

The embroidery may be all in one color or the flowers pink or yellow and green leaves with darker green stems. The ribbon should match the flowers.

The cushion is very dainty when made of white plique, with dots embroidered in pink with pink ribbon or blue dots and blue ribbon. This is unusual and is as pretty a pincushion as any one might wish. It is shown in the sketch.

Either the embroidered or the plique cushion may be laundered and should be kept daintily immaculate.

The edge of the undercover is to be buttonholed. Holes may be worked for the ribbon. Lay the embroidered cover over the cushion and the plain one under it and run the ribbon through the holes.

If desired a little sashet may be put in with the filling of the cushion.

A GATE FOR BEDS.

Crossbars Can Be Closed Up When Not In Use.

No cribs are required in households which are equipped with one of the bed gates recently invented, nor need adults worry about tumbling out on the floor during nightmares. The gate is of metal and is composed of crossbars pivoted at their points of intersection so that the whole can be stretched out to the length of a bed or folded up in a small compass at the head or foot.

In the center is a vertical bar to hold the gate against outward movement. Parents who have small children sleeping with them will find the convenience a great convenience. This device means a considerable saving in money to families who do not have enough little members to make a crib paying and more or less permanent investment. A crib is of no use after a child is old enough to sleep without accident, and the gate here described solves the problem of how to get along without them—without cribs, that is.
